Prologue **

"I will bring my kits to be raised as kittypets" spat a golden furred she-cat lashing her tail so fast it made the leaves on the forest floor rustle. "No" whimpered a Brown furred tom with a pale underbelly, "their my kits too"! "But you are never here with them, all you do is come once a moon " snarled the she-cat. "What would I tell my leader if he caught he here with you and the kits" said tom raising his voice. "So you're embarrassed of your family"spat the she-cat staring up at a hole in a willow tree. "Never" meowed the tom gently, "you and the kits mean more to me than the clan ever did".

"Then start showing it, the kits barely know who you are" said the she-cat lowering her voice but did not try to stop showing her anger. "I will try better to be their for you and the kits but it is hard to be their when I can't be here very much" he replied somberly." I wish I could but I can't", before the she-cat could reply a small head popped out of hole in the willow tree, "Leaf is having a bad dream" it squeaked. "Don't worry Nettle" the she-cat consoled. "I will be right there", she waited until the little cat went away. "That's why you have to make me a promise". "What does that have to do with anything"? Said the tom clearly puzzled, "the promise is that you will bring the kits and me to your clan when they are six moons old, they shall train to be apprentices and we will be warriors" and with that last word she climbed up into the hole of the willow tree.
